

SACRED TOMCAT KIDNAPPED FROM A HINDOO TEMPLE

It Clung to Sailor's Back When Worshippers Gave Him the Chase.

AT LEAST HE SAYS SO.

And to Prove It Albert Berrige
Brought the Cat to New York.

A daring apprentice who had the audacity to steal into a Hindoo temple and kidnap a sacred cat is the tale that the British tramp steamer Harpagus brings to the port of New York. The Harpagus' apprentice, Albert Berrige, named behind the veil of one of the most sacred temples of the Hindoos in Bombay, saw with his Caucasian eyes the great Idols and returned to the outer world with the sacred cat. The cat once bore, no doubt, a strange Indian name, but since joining the British tramp the sacred feline has been dubbed Tommy. Tommy is as black as the conscience of a sinner and is not very different from the cats of New York. Black cats bring good luck to ships that plough the Seven Seas, so Tommy is held in great esteem aboard the Harpagus; almost as great esteem as when he was a sacred cat in a mystic Hindoo temple.

While the Harpagus swung at her anchor off "The City of the Dreadful Night," as Kipling has called Bombay, the towering domes of the Hindoo temple, the kindly Albert's imagination, and he chafed at the bit until he had obtained shore leave.

"Be back by sundown, young man," ordered the captain as the apprentice went over the side about mid-day.

Through the winding streets of the city wandered the imaginative youth. He visited the bazaars and gazed with horror at the loathsome creatures as they sat perched in the trees beside the Tower of Silence, where the Parsees leave their dead to be discovered by the great winged scavengers.

There was so much to interest Albert that he forgot altogether the captain's injunction to be back to the Harpagus by sundown. Darkness had enveloped the city when Albert reached one of the Hindoo temples, probably the most sacred in all Bombay. There was a special celebration going on at the temple and crowds of the faithful were devoutly watching their way up the broad steps and through the doorway.

Albert had not been told that all but Hindoos are barred from the temple, and with true apprentice audacity he slipped in at the back door, undiscovered by the crowd and in the darkness, he slipped through the entrance and found himself within the sacred place.

"It was all dark and sooty in this temple," says the apprentice in telling of his adventure. "There were big pillars all around with the most scary looking carvings you ever saw. I got behind one of these pillars all by myself and tried to see what was going on. Away off in the distance I saw some lights burning in front of a row of the idols that looked like huge monkeys. The Hindoos who were coming into the temple were making their way toward these idols, bowing and sort of singing. They were so busy in their worship of the big golden monkeys and things that they would not have seen me if I had been on fire."

"I was so encouraged by my success in getting to the front near the big idol that I kept on the move through the dark. Suddenly, as I tip toed along, I put my foot down on something soft. The next thing I knew there came a swirl and a screech that made my backbone feel as though a bolt of lightning was running up and down it. My hair stood on end, I was paralyzed. The singing and the moaning had ceased. There was absolute silence for a moment.

"Suddenly I felt something hit me in the middle of the back. Then I felt sharp claws digging into my hide. The next instant I was travelling like a meteor toward the temple entrance and every man jack of those Hindoos in pursuit. The howls of the Hindoos and the claws of the cat inspired me to the effort of my life. I think I could have broken all the running records in the world with that encouragement."

"When I reached the door two husky Hindoos jumped in front of me. I lowered my head and struck one of them amidships. He went down with a gulp like a man swallowing his Adam's apple. I dodged the other fellow and jumped and half tumbled down the steps from the temple doorway. When I hit the street I kept up my running. The Hindoos were soon distanced. I must have run for a mile with that cat clinging at my spinal column. Then when I got up a dark street I stopped and tried to dislodge the cat. I finally had to take off my coat to get the beast to release his claws."

"After I had Mr. Cat in my arms he was as docile as you please and purring in real cat fashion. So I says to myself, it's a black cat and that means good luck, so I'll take him to the Harpagus. I had some fun explaining why I was so late, but I had the cat to prove my adventure in the temple and the old man let it go at that."

Overplayed Her Part.
(From the Pittsburgh Post.)

"Didn't you see the place?"

"Seems the lady was a suffragist and wanted a maid to look after her children."

"You have had plenty of experience along those lines?"

"Yes, I thought I'd catch the job. Told her I was a suffragist myself and an ardent one."

"And then?"

"Then she wouldn't hire me."

MOUNTED MAN HURT.

Pittsburgh's Horse Riders and Path
Over on McCarthy.

A newspaper thrown from a truck car fluttered under the feet of Mattie, Pittsburgh John J. McCarthy's mount, as he turned from One Hundred and Sixty-ninth street into Broadway avenue at 5 o'clock this morning and encountered the animal. The reared and fell with McCarthy underneath him. Edward Polkman, a rider was a block away and hurried to the side of the plunging horse in time to prevent it from trampling McCarthy, whose left leg was pinned under it.

The injured man was taken to his quarters in the Highbridge police station and found to have two broken ribs and several bruises, but his leg was not broken. He declined to go to the hospital, and was taken to his home, No. 1298 Clay street, the Bronx.
